— HIS RECORD —

In 1954, when he accepted a position west of Boston, it was anticipated that it might become necessary for him to take up residence outside of Peabody. At that time, his record was characterized as follows:

"Councillor Ryan is one of the most objective thinkers in the city council. His has been a conservative and realistic approach to all problems that have faced him as a councillor." (Salem Evening News, August 11, 1954).

"Councillor Ryan has made a fine record while in city government." (Peabody Times, August 12, 1954).

"Councillor Ryan has been one of the most active, energetic, conscientious and constructive representatives in the council that this city has ever had." (Salem Sunday Express, August 15, 1954).

In 1959, anticipating extended business trips out of state during the following year which would necessitate his absence from council meetings on frequent occasions, he declined to stand for re-election. At that time the press commented as follows:

"The surprise of the day last Tuesday was when Councillor Joseph Curtis Ryan did not file nomination papers for re-election. Councillor Ryan, often referred to as one of the most brilliant young men ever to serve in that capacity, stated that increased responsibilities at work had prompted him to withdraw as a candidate for re-election. His absence from the floor of the council chamber will be surely missed by all of the citizens of the city." (Salem Sunday Express, September 13, 1959).

"Ryan was not a politician; he was a leader in the fight for better government. The city is losing a good man." (Lynn Telegram-News, September 9, 1959).
